We are convinced that regional and urban planning can be a guideline for investments.

In emerging economies the urban population is growing fast or sometimes even exploding. But how can we organize this growth in a way that progress brings what everyone hopes?

To answer this question Wissing advises governments in the preparation of comprehensive masterplans for cities and regions. These plans are guidelines to the future and give a clear picture of the opportunities and threats in the future developments. Also these plans help to make critical decisions and strategic investments.

Guided by our solid knowledge of urban and rural structures, processes and all its relevant aspects, we are capable to sharply understand the potential of a city. With our experience we connect the spatial structure with infrastructure, demographic and socio-economic developments. Thus, a balanced development becomes possible, with adequate housing, diversity of employment, schools, and a solid network for infrastructure, adequate electricity, water and food supply. According to this we create plans that give each location its unique character.
